Anlin will debut a state-of-the-art capstock coextrusion technology at the homebuilding show, which will be shown in new Designer Black™ on Anlin products at the PGT Innovations booth, located in Central Hall Booth C4525. The contemporary Designer Black finishes appeal to today's homeowners with a sleek, modern aesthetic. Made in the U.S., the capstock coextrusion ensures 100 percent molecular bonding between the black acrylic and the vinyl substrate, creating product options with exceptional durability and scratch resistance.

"We are excited to offer consumers the best of both worlds – dependability and style — with this new Designer Black capstock option," said Jimmy Petros, Vice President of Sales & Business Development for Anlin. "As an industry leader in manufacturing energy efficient windows, we are proud to offer a window that provides exceptional U-Factor and solar heat gain coefficient (SHGC) performance ratings that homeowners can count on."

Also on display in the booth will be ULite™ thin triple glass technology. Engineered to enhance the everyday comfort and performance of a home, this revolutionary glass product, developed from PGT Innovations' collaboration with Corning®, meets some of the highest window energy efficiency standards around, including the Energy Star Version 7.0 ratings in the north central and northern climate zones. The unique insulated glass unit (IGU) design includes two outer panes of traditional glass with an ultra-thin pane of Corning Architectural Technical Glass (ATG) at the center.
